92. Two parties entered into a contract. They later realized that there was a mistake in their understanding of the law as applicable in India. This makes their contract:
 (1) Non est. (2) Void. (3) Voidable (4) None of these.
93. A contract caused by mistake of law not in force in India:
 (1) Is void.
 (2) Is voidable.
 (3) Has the same effect as though it was caused by a mistake of fact.
 (4) None of the above.
94. An agreement in restraint of trade is:
 (1) Valid. (2) Void.
 (3) Void to the extent of such restraint. (4) Voidable.

95. Which of the following is an offer?
 (1) A bid at an auction sale. (2) Banker's catalogue of charges.
 (3) Menu card at a restaurant. (4) All of the above.
96. If a future event on which a contract is contingent is the way in which a person will act at an unspecified time, the event shall be considered to become impossible:
 (1) When such person does anything which renders it impossible that he should so act within any definite time.
 (2) Otherwise than under further contingencies.
 (3) Both (1) & (2) above.
 (4) None of the above.
97. In which of the following cases, a contingent contract becomes void:
 (1) If the contract contemplates the happening of the event within a certain time, and event does not happen or its happening becomes impossible.
 (2) If the performance is made to depend upon an event which is already impossible.
 (3) If the event contemplated does not happen.
 (4) Both (1) & (2) above

Note (Questions 98–100): These questions have only two answer options marked as (1) and (2). Choose the most appropriate option.

98. An unregistered partnership firm has claims arising from a contract against several persons. After obtaining registration of the firm with the Registrar of Firms on the last date of limitation for filing the suit, the suit is filed on the same date. The defendants take a plea that the plaintiff Firm was not registered neither at the time of the agreement nor at the time when alleged cause of action accrued and the registration on the last date of limitation is of no avail and the suit is hence bad. Whether the said defence has any merit?
 (1) Yes.
 (2) No.
99. 'A' inducts 'B' as a tenant in the property. 'B' pays rent to 'A' for three months when 'A' suddenly dies. Owing to inter se disputes between the legal heirs of 'A', neither any rent is paid by 'B' for over twelve years nor does any legal heir of 'A' otherwise deals with 'B' with respect to the said property. After nearly fifteen years when the disputes between the legal heirs of 'A' are resolved, the legal heir who is so held entitled to the property demands arrears of rent from 'B' as well as determines the tenancy of 'B' and demands possession from 'B'. 'B' refuses contending that he has become owner of the property by adverse possession since he was not treated as a tenant for nearly 15 years. Is there any merit in the said defence of 'B'?
 (1) Yes.
 (2) No.
100. Under the law in India a joint promisee as distinct from a joint and several promisee is liable alone to discharge the joint promise.
 (1) True.
 (2) False.

Directions (Questions 101–110) : Read the following passage carefully and choose the best answer to each question given below it.

Reasoning is an argument in which certain things being laid down, something other than these necessarily comes about through them. It is a 'demonstration', when the premises from which the reasoning starts are true and primary, or are such that our knowledge of them has originally come through premises which are primary and true. Reasoning on the other hand is dialectical, if it reasons from opinions that are generally accepted. Things are 'true' and 'primary' which are believed on the strength not of anything else but of themselves: for in regard to the first principle of science it is improper to ask any further for the why and wherefore of them; each of the first principle should command belief in and by itself. On the other hand, those opinions are "generally accepted" which are accepted by everyone or by the majority or by the philosophers, that is, by all or by the majority or by the most notable and illustrious of them. Again reasoning is contentious if it starts from opinions that seem to be generally accepted but are not really such or again if it merely seems to reason from opinions that are or seem to be generally accepted. For not every opinion that seems to be generally accepted actually is generally accepted. For in none of the opinions which we call generally accepted is the illusion entirely on the surface, as happens in the case of the principals of contentious arguments; for the nature of the fallacy in these is obvious immediately, and as a rule even to persons with little power of comprehension. So then, of the contentious reasonings mentioned, the former really deserves to be called "reasoning" as well, but the other should be called "contentious reasoning", but not reasoning since it appears to reason, but does not really do so. Further, besides all the reasonings we have mentioned there are the misreasonings that start from the premises peculiar to the special sciences, as happens (for example) in the case of geometry and her sister sciences. For this form of reasoning appears to differ from the reasonings mentioned above; the man who draws a false figure reasons from things that are neither true and primary, nor yet generally accepted. For he does not fall within the definition; he does not assume opinions that are received either by everyone, or by the majority, or by the philosophers - that is to say, by all, or by most, or by the most illustrious of them. But he conducts his reasoning upon assumptions, which though appropriate to the science in question, are not true; for he effects his misreasoning either by describing the semi circles wrongly, or by drawing certain lines in a way in which they could not be drawn.

101. According to the author, misreasoning is :
- (1) A form of reasoning. (2) Contentious reasoning.
 (3) Dialectical reasoning. (4) Demonstrative reasoning.
102. A 'First Principle' is :
- (1) Anything that is generally accepted as.
 (2) A belief that is true and primary.
 (3) Things that are generally accepted but not really are such.
 (4) None of the above.
103. Which form of reasoning draws from neither true and primary, nor yet generally accepted ?
- (1) Dialectic (2) Demonstration (3) Contentious (4) Misreasoning
104. Reasoning based on subjective opinions will best be called
- (1) Demonstration (2) Contentious (3) Misreasoning (4) Dialectic
105. How many forms of contentious reasoning are mentioned by the author?
- (1) 1 (2) 2 (3) 3 (4) 4
106. Arguments that are derived from premises that are believed to be true on their own strength are
- (1) Dialectical (2) Demonstrative (3) Contentious (4) Misreasoning

107. Which one of the following is not a synonym of 'fallacy'?
- (1) Erroneous belief (2) Myth (3) Canard (4) Platitude
108. Which one of the following is not an antonym of 'illustrious'?
- (1) Unknown (2) Nameless (3) Anonymous (4) Distinguished
109. Which of the following statements is correct?
- (1) Opinions that are generally accepted may not be true and primary.
(2) Opinions that are true and primary can never be the premises for reasoning.
(3) Arguments that start from false statements or figures do not lead to the correct conclusions.
(4) Misreasoning can only be used to prove geometrical theorems.
110. Contentious means
- (1) Given (2) Debatable (3) Obvious (4) Without doubt

Directions (Questions 111–117): Read the following passage carefully and choose the best answer to each question given below it.

One major obstacle in the struggle to lower carbon dioxide emissions, which are believed to play a role in climate change, is the destruction of tropical rain forests. Trees naturally store more carbon dioxide as they age, and the trees of the tropical rain forests in the Amazon, for example, store an average of 500 tons of carbon dioxide per hectare (10,000 square miles). When such trees are harvested, they release their carbon dioxide into the atmosphere. This release of carbon dioxide through the destruction of tropical forests, which experts estimate accounts for 20% of global carbon dioxide emissions annually, traps heat in the earth's atmosphere, which leads to global warming.

The Kyoto treaty set forth a possible measure to curtail the rate of deforestation. In the treaty, companies that exceed their carbon dioxide emission limits are permitted to buy the right to pollute by funding reforestation projects in tropical rain forests. Since forests absorb carbon dioxide through photosynthesis, planting such forests helps reduce the level of atmospheric carbon dioxide, thus balancing out the companies surplus of carbon dioxide emissions. However, attempts at reforestation have so far been unable to keep up with the alarming rate of deforestation, and it has become increasingly clear that further steps must be taken to curtail deforestation and its possible deleterious effects on the global environment.

One possible solution is to offer incentives to governments to protect their forests. While this solution could lead to a drastic reduction in the levels of carbon dioxide, such incentives would need to be tied to some form of verification, which is extremely difficult, since most of the world's tropical forests are in remote areas, like Brazil's Amazon basin or the island of New Guinea, which makes on-site verification logistically difficult. Furthermore, heavy cloud cover and frequent heavy rain make conventional satellite monitoring difficult.

Recently, scientists at the Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency have suggested that the rates of deforestation could be monitored using new technology to analyze radar waves emitted from a surveillance satellite. By analyzing multiple radar microwaves sent by a satellite, scientists are able to prepare a detailed, high resolution map of remote tropical forests. Unlike photographic satellite images, radar images can be measured at night and during days of heavy cloud cover and bad weather.

Nevertheless, critics of government incentives argue that radar monitoring has been employed in the past with little success, citing the Global Rain Forest Mapping Project which was instituted in the mid 1990s amid concern over rapid deforestation in the Amazon. However, the limited data of the Mapping Project was due only to the small amount of data that could be sent from the satellite. Modern satellites can send and receive 10 times more data than their predecessors of the mid 1990s, obviating past problems with radar monitoring. Furthermore, recent technological advances in satellite radar that allow for more accurate measurements to be made, even in remote areas, make such technology a promising step in monitoring and controlling global climate change.

111. Which one of the following most accurately expresses the main point of the passage?
- (1) Although scientists continue to search for a solution, there is, as yet, no good solution for the problem of rain forest deforestation.
 - (2) One major obstacle to lessening the contribution of atmospheric carbon dioxide caused by deforestation may be removed through satellite radar monitoring.
 - (3) Recent increases in the rate of deforestation of tropical rain forests have caused serious concern and spurred efforts to curb such deforestation.
 - (4) Although an excellent first step, the solutions set forth by the Kyoto treaty will not significantly curb the rate of deforestation unless companies begin to lessen their carbon dioxide emissions.
112. It can be inferred from the passage that photographic satellite images
- (1) are impervious to bad weather.
 - (2) cannot be used efficiently at night.
 - (3) are less expensive than radar monitoring.
 - (4) were extensively used in the 1990s to measure tropical forest deforestation.
113. Which one of the following most accurately describes the author's attitude toward radar monitoring as expressed in the passage?
- | | |
|----------------------|--------------------------|
| (1) Wary skepticism | (2) Cautious ambivalence |
| (3) Grudging respect | (4) Reasoned optimism |
114. The information presented in the passage implies which one of the following about the Mapping Project?
- (1) The project was unsuccessful because it used only satellite radar monitoring.
 - (2) If the satellite had been able to send more data, the project may have been successful.
 - (3) It was established by the Kyoto treaty in response to widespread concern over deforestation.
 - (4) The project was designed to monitor only forests in Brazil's Amazon basin and the forests on the island of New Guinea.
115. According to the passage, each of the following is true about tropical rainforests EXCEPT
- (1) harvested trees release carbon dioxide.
 - (2) they are sometimes subject to heavy cloud cover.
 - (3) they are protected from deforestation by the Kyoto treaty.
 - (4) they are not always easily reachable by modern transportation.
116. Which one of the following, if true, most weakens the author's argument against the critics of government incentives ?
- (1) Radar images sent by satellites in the mid 1990s would have needed to have stored 100 times more data in order to have been useful for radar monitoring.
 - (2) New technology promises other forms of monitoring that may be even more effective than radar monitoring.
 - (3) The cost of radar monitoring may render it more expensive than some countries can afford.
 - (4) No form of monitoring can ever offer complete assurance of a government's compliance with deforestation incentives.

117. Which one of the following best describes the organization of the passage?
- (1) A problem is described and a possible solution to the problem is suggested; the methodology for implementing such a solution is described, difficulties with the implementation are noted and the solution is dismissed.
 - (2) A problem is described and a possible solution to the problem is suggested; the solution's shortcomings are noted, an alternative solution is suggested, then qualified in light of new evidence.
 - (3) A solution to a problem is described, multiple solutions to the problem are discussed, the possible outcomes of each solution are evaluated and one solution is recommended over the others.
 - (4) A problem is described and a possible solution to the problem is suggested; possible shortcomings of the solution are noted, an alternative solution is suggested and a potential obstacle to the solution is discussed.
